Editorial Note: Caution is urged in the adoption of the standard building construction codes as presented in this chapter. Positive action must be taken to delete, change or modify certain provisions in these code which are not relevant to all municipalities and may create unnecessary, confusion and difficulty. For example, the term “building official” is used in the codes to identify the enforcement official. In some instance more authority is granted to this official than the municipal governing authority may deem appropriate. Also, the qualifications for this official may be more stringent than necessary (section 102.1, Standard Building Code, requires 10 years experience as an architect, engineer or equivalent). Reserved sections within articles can be used to promulgate deletions and changes. The authority for municipalities to adopt standard codes such as these is L.R.S. 33:1368-1370. Publication of the code text is not required. Sufficient copies of adopted codes are to be made available to interested parties at reasonable cost. It is recommended that an official or a committee be appointed as the enforcement agency for the municipality in regard to the building regulation. Each article in this chapter requires an affirmative decision as to the official or agency selected. Fire limits or fire hazard zones are authorized by L.R.S. 33:402 (8) and 33:4741 (in municipalities exceeding 500 in population). The latter reference and subsequent sections give municipalities power to control types and quality of construction and to require building permits.
